PEACE // MANATEE // BOTTLE GREEN

Glass bottles have been made for centuries in many different colors. The widest variation in colors is likely among green glass. Bottle green refers to a dark green color popular in the Victorian era. Colored bottles were cheaper to make than clear ones, and they kept out light better. Green glass results from different coloring agents and processes, with iron, chromium and copper playing starring roles. Cobalt (blue) mixed with chromium (green) makes glass with a blue-green color. Bottles made from quartz were often naturally green. Frequently found in nature, dark greens symbolize a transition from stressful environments into a calm space.
